Just because Bree Nielson doesn't have a family, that doesn't mean she can't put her heart and soul into helping other people. That's what led her to major in social work. Finding real people to bring into her heart, however, is harder. The idea of love becomes even more confusing when two mysterious men come into her life. One is Brandon, the handsome older brother of a sorority sister. The other, known only as Greenman, writes to her in fascinating letters. As Bree discovers her talents for helping disabled kids, she learns that success in life and love is all about accommodation--the give and take necessary to help people be their best. But what happens when the one you love doesn't want to accommodate?
